In his captivating memoir, An Englishman's Love Letter to His Chosen Home, author and journalist John Smith embarks on a deeply personal and poignant journey to find his place in the world. Through vivid prose and evocative imagery, Smith shares his experiences of living in different countries and cultures, and the challenges and joys of finding a true sense of belonging.

Born and raised in England, Smith spent his early years feeling like an outsider. He never quite fit in with his peers, and he longed for a place where he could truly belong. In his early twenties, Smith decided to leave England and explore the world. He spent time living in France, Italy, and Spain, immersing himself in different cultures and ways of life.

As he traveled, Smith began to realize that his sense of belonging was not tied to any one country or culture. Instead, he found that he could feel at home anywhere he went, as long as he was surrounded by people who shared his values and interests. In the end, Smith decided to make his home in a small town in France. He found a sense of community there that he had never experienced before, and he finally felt like he had found his true home.

An Englishman's Love Letter to His Chosen Home is a beautifully written and deeply moving memoir. Smith's journey is one that will resonate with anyone who has ever felt like an outsider. His story is a testament to the power of human connection and the importance of finding a place where we can truly belong.

Excerpt from An Englishman's Love Letter to His Chosen Home

I have always been a bit of a wanderer. I have never been able to stay in one place for too long. I have always felt the need to explore, to see what is over the next hill, or around the next bend. I have always been searching for something, but I never knew what it was.

I have traveled to many different countries, and I have lived in several different cities. I have met many different people, and I have learned a lot about different cultures. But I have never felt truly at home anywhere.

Until I came to France.

I don't know what it is about France that makes me feel so at home. Maybe it is the beautiful countryside, with its rolling hills and vineyards. Maybe it is the charming villages, with their stone houses and cobblestone streets.

Maybe it is the delicious food, or the fine wine. Or maybe it is the people, who are always so welcoming and friendly.

Whatever it is, I have finally found a place where I belong. I have found my home.

I am an Englishman, but France is my chosen home. And I am proud to call myself a Francophile.
