

From the Foster House to the White House: The Extraordinary Journey of Kamala Harris

Kamala Harris's journey from foster care to the White House is an inspiring story of perseverance, resilience, and the power of education. Born to Jamaican and Indian parents in Oakland, California, Harris spent her early years in a low-income housing project. When she was five, her parents divorced, and she and her younger sister, Maya, were raised by their mother, Shyamala Gopalan Harris, a breast cancer researcher and activist.

Gopalan Harris was a strong believer in the power of education, and she instilled in her daughters the importance of hard work and determination. Kamala attended Howard University, a historically black university in Washington, D.C., where she studied political science and economics. After graduating from Howard, Harris earned a law degree from the University of California, Hastings College of the Law.

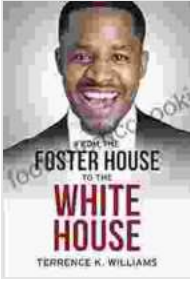

Harris began her legal career as a prosecutor in the Alameda County District Attorney's Office. She quickly rose through the ranks, and in 2003, she was elected district attorney of San Francisco. As district attorney, Harris focused on reforming the criminal justice system and improving public safety. She also created a number of programs to help victims of crime, including a program to provide legal assistance to victims of domestic violence.
