Visa Requirements

The first step to settling in Costa Rica is to obtain a visa. The type of visa you need will depend on your purpose for staying in the country. If you are planning on staying for less than 90 days, you can enter Costa Rica on a tourist visa. However, if you plan on staying for longer than 90 days, you will need to apply for a residency visa.

There are several different types of residency visas available, depending on your circumstances. The most common type of residency visa is the pensionado visa, which is available to retirees who receive a monthly pension from their home country. Other types of residency visas include the investor visa, the work visa, and the student visa.

To apply for a residency visa, you will need to submit a number of documents, including your passport, a birth certificate, a police clearance, and proof of financial means. The application process can take several months, so it is important to start the process early.
